From the silent film era to the present, physicians, health professionals, governmental agencies, and voluntary associations have sought to use motion pictures to advance medical science, train health professionals, and educate the public. This presentation will feature a rich sampling of rarely screened animated medical cartoons from the 1920s to the 1960s, with expert commentary from historians from the National Library of Medicine that will help inform future efforts to understand and use mass media to advance medicine, medical research and the public health.
