New visual identity and website

The AAMC Curriculum Inventory (CI) has a new visual identity! The AAMC CI staff worked with communications staff to talk about what the CI program is, and what imagery would best represent it. We described a network a data, with different paths of integration and connections. What resulted is the imagery you see on this newsletter as well as on the new CI homepage, and we're excited to use this consistent visual identity for the CI program in our future communications.

CI Committee

One of the ways the AAMC CI program makes sure its plans and resources target member needs is our CI Committee. Our CI Committee is made up of members from across the U.S. (and one Canadian!), from relatively new and established medical schools, from public and private medical schools, and different geographic regions. Members of the CI Committee members recently took part in a two-day in person retreat in Washington, D.C. At this retreat, we focused on a number of areas in the AAMC CI program, including:

- MedBiquitous CI technical standards
- Communication/networking opportunities for members
- CI keywords
- CI data reports
- CI presence at Learn Serve Lead
- CI data quality measures

We thank CI Committee members for their works, thoughtful recommendations, and commitments in their supports to the AAMC CI as well as to their professional community.

As always, if you have any questions, comments, or suggestions please reach out to ci@aamc.org.

Onward!
