

REGIONAL ADMISSIONS CALLS TAKEAWAYS

Many schools are still deciding whether or not to offer virtual interviews in the next cycle. Those that are offering virtual interviews want to be mindful about ensuring this an equitable experience for all students. Offering technical checks in advance of virtual interview was discussed as a promising practice.

The professionalism and perceived lack of preparedness of the incoming class are a major concern for many schools.

There are still questions about how to evaluate the quality of non-traditional experiences. Additionally, there were concerns about the inequities created when some students can pay for experiences (e.g. scribing) and other students cannot.

There are concerns about the quality of letters of recommendation when many students have decreased interaction with faculty members.
