The Board follows the governance model detailed in "Governance as Leadership" (Chait, Ryan, and Taylor), which outlines three distinct modes - fiduciary, strategic, and generative. In its fiduciary mode, the Board stewards the resources of the association through tasks such as approving the annual operating budget and AAMC policies. In its strategic mode, the Board discusses and approves items such as the association's advocacy positions, strategic partnerships with peer organizations, and ensures resource allocation is aligned with strategic priorities. In its generative mode, the Board engages in discussions about issues such as the sustainability of the academic health enterprise and emerging issues that may shape academic medicine and therefore the AAMC.

What unique perspective or diversity of experience as a junior faculty member do you offer that might enhance the work of the Board? (Limit 2500 characters)

As you consider the changing landscape of health care, research endeavors and medical education, from your perspective as a junior faculty member, what do you see as the most pressing issues facing the AAMC? (Limit 2500 characters)

Describe a time, at your home institution or in a volunteer role, when you had to make a decision that took into account different stakeholder needs. How did you seek input and analyze data to reach that decision? How did you manage the expectations of the various stakeholders, and how did you bring those with a differing opinion along to the selected course of action? (Limit 3500 characters)
